told him yes; but he probably won't believe us after he reads what we have to say about his new picture, "Peck's Bad Boy," at the Straind. It isn't Jackie's fault at all that this picture is not a masterpiece. If only all the contributory factors had reached the perfection of the standard set by Jackie and Queenie, his dog! But they did not. They did not even come anywhere near it. You will wait for a whole reel before you begin to decide that you are going to be disappointed in this picture. At least that is the way we reacted to this old masterpiece which has found its way to the screen. Jackie himself is an artist. He is positively Chaplinesque in the amount of humor he is able to inject in a scene with a minimum of effort. The same may be said of Queenie, and really you marvel almost as much at one as at the other, for Jackie Coogan is only a baby, and most children of his age are considered infant prodigies if they can lisp out "I see the cow. Is it a brown cow?" Ne, it is a white cow."

I I win Cobb wrote the titles and we sat back prepared to revel in them for an hour and a quarter. Mr. Cobb can Irvin Cobb wrote the titles and we sat back prepared to revel in them for an hour and a quarter. Mr. Cobb can undoubtedly say funnier things on a paper than anybody else, we have said, but he certainly did not prove it in his movie titles. Any one might have written them, and with the exception of one or two they are not funny. The picture relies for its laughs on the antics of the bad boy. And they swarmed all over him in they swarmed all over him in they was a counterpart in real iffe and surely no five-year-old boy sever was like this one.

With the exception of Raymond Hatton, who played the pirate owner of the corner grocery store, the supporting cast was not good. Wasel of the young doctor and Doris May was the sister, but where are her eston and down and down and down him to the best she couldn't have been more than his stepmother. After you have seen the picture you will understand. It seems to us that it would have been best fitted to write, or at least to suggest the titles. If you don't believe he could do it, listen to this:

We must have something big for this:

A Matter of Education

It is a tenable theory, indeed upon close examination and analysis it may prove to be the fact, that the differences that arise between so-called capital and so-called labor apparently due primarily to different viewpoints are actually due, first to lack of educa-tion, and second, lack of intelligence.

None will even intimate for a moment that these two qualities are lacking in the leaders of labor, but the leaders are not always able to lead or rather to govern, and, in any event, it is by the will and consent of the governed, that they rule.

The spirit of rebellion against wage reduction at this time among wage earners in general is similar to that of a child badly brought up and uneducated, told to do this, that, or the other thing, without reason assigned therefor, and without adequate explanation. Neither the child nor the wage earner is entirely to blame.

It is clear to the educated, intelligent and thinking man of affairs that if trade is to be stabilized and business resumed, we must have lower prices. Raw materials have come down, and retail prices have been lowered, but not far enough. What is holding them up today in very large part is the cost of labor that enters into their manufacture and distribution. It would be Utopian to expect that the readjustment can be made evenly and proportionately all around and at the same time. There must be hardship here and there during the course of reconstruction. There is no way of obviating this, but it can be alleviated if the laborer will accept his share of the burden as the manufacturer has in most cases accepted his.

In the instances where labor illogically demands higher wages than necessary for decent living with a fair amount of luxury, they must be dealt with accordingly.
